

Sustainability Symposium
Week of May 17, 2004
Room 2205, 77 W. Jackson Blvd; Chicago, IL

The pace of resource use must be brought into balance if we want to provide our descendants with a planet with comparable resources and environmental quality to what we received from our ancestors. New paradigms in LEED, Smart Growth, Conservation Design and others guide us towards restoring this balance.

This course will consist of three parts: participant presentations of their sustainable projects, experts from the Chicago area, and interactive exercises. It will give participants a chance to share the successes of their projects with their peers, and will also provide guidance and inspiration from some nationally recognized cutting edge professionals. There will also be an opportunity for those who are interested in sustainability but have not yet participated in a sustainable project to get their feet wet.

Please complete the questionnaire below (by March 15, 2004). This will give us an idea of where the interests lie and how long to make the program. We anticipate covering the following topics:

- |                      |                   |                         |
|----------------------|-------------------|-------------------------|
| - Stormwater         | - Green Materials | - Energy                |
| - Native Landscaping | - Green Roofs     | - Historic Preservation |
| - Agriculture        | - LEED            | - Transportation        |
